Because large brokers offer better value and dependable service because The brokerage process has been around long enough to streamline. I should note that I'm not a fan of showing tickets from brokers buying Las Vegas because they end up costing you way too much. However, I understand that there are some Las Vegas shows that you really want to see and tickets can be rare. You can always try concierge at the hotel as well as for any extra show tickets. (!!! tip the concierge than paying the broker) check the prices on show tickets in Las Vegas before you shop. This should help you understand how much you will spend. Try your luck with stubhub.com, they have a guarantee process that allows you some rest when buying tickets and they often have less markup than ticket brokers. Be very weary of fraud when dealing with individual ticket sellers. Never buy from the seller unless you believe that you can locate their physical address in case the ticket does not come through. StubHub is in place for you so there should be less anxiety. You will also often find brokers on these sites. Whether you're buying from a broker or person, do your homework to make sure they're reliable. Established brokers have a advantage here and trusted brokers will always display the BBB logo on their site and provide secure secure online transactions with data encryption. If you are considering buying tickets on the road from a ticket scaler you need to be careful. Scaling is highly discouraging in Las Vegas as well as illegal. If you're lucky enough to see someone sell tickets outside the venue the day you want to attend, there's probably an officer close to just waiting for him to try and sell them to you. Be vigilant and if the scalper is very cautious, it is probably legal, if he has no concern to sell it with everyone keeping an eye on you, he can sell you junk. Planning a trip?
